History of religious christmas carols

Ebenezer Scrooge, Bob Cratchit, Tiny Tim – everyone knows these words. The same goes for the song God of Rest Ye, Merry Gentlemen and the phrase Bah! Who guests most loved: Charles Dickens created a memorable world of Christmas Carol, one of the most famous Christmas stories ever written. The story is especially beloved by Dickens' native England, where families tell it every December as one of their Christmas traditions. Christmas Carol, of course, centers on a scrooge, who runs through various stages of his life with a ghost and realizes he has done more badly than good. But Scrooge eventually finds redemption and spreads the Christmas mood to one and all. Such an adaptation of Lisa Harkrader captures the essence of Christmas Carol. Whether you live in England, the United States or any other country, it is a great addition to your family's Christmas traditions. Advertising Ebenezer Scrooge hooked over his account books. Scrooge's clerk, Bob Cratchit, huddled at his desk in a tiny outer office. The doors burst open, and the explosion of December air whipped through two rooms. Merry Christmas, uncle! said Scaoge's nephew as he walked into the office. Christmas, Scroo sees Scroogi. Who liked the guests the most: You can not mean that, uncle, said his nephew. Why are you close early today? And become like other Christmas fools, buying gifts I can't afford? Scrooge turned back to his books. No thanks. Suit yourself, said his nephew. But I hope you at least stop by christmas dinner tomorrow. When his nephew opened the door to leave, another gust of wind broke into the office. With it came the sound of carolers singing. Scrooge banged the window open. You! he shouted at the carolers. You there! One of the carolers, the boy, stopped singing and looked up at Scrooge. How can a man do a fair day's work with you howling out of his office? Scrooge snarled. Best Western Premier Shaftesbury Paddington Court London La casa. Leave me alone! Scrooge banged the window shut. Merry Christmas, indeed, he muttered. What should they be happy about? Sir? Bob Krahy struck the door of Scathus. I've copied all the letters and submitted the documents. I also brought more firewood and swept out of the ashes. And, well, it's the closing time, Mr. Scrooge. Fine, said Scrooge. If your work is finished, you can leave. Mr. Scrooge? said Cratchit. Tomorrow is Christmas, a day to spend with family. You want a day off, I think? Scrooge said as he glared at her. Well, yes, Mr. Scrooge, said Cratchit. After all, it's Christmas. Christmas? We loved the hotel. Good. Remove tomorrow, but be here at the beginning of the next day. Yes, sir. You can count on it, sir, Cratchit said as he pulled his coat cozy around him. Merry Christmas, Mr. Scrooge. Humbug, growled Scrooge. He opened the front door, and Cratchit scurried out. In the corner, neighboring boys were naked down a steep hill. The krači leaped onto one of sleds and slid to the bottom of the mountain, laughing and shouting: Merry Christmas! Fool. Scrooge scowled. He settled back in his chair and finished his accounts. Darkness fell, and Scrood closed the last accounting book. He stood and stretched, his back stiff from the cold and long hours bent over his work. As he locked the counting house, he looked at the sign above the door. It was this: firm scrooge and Marley. Jacob Marley, said Scrooge. A man who knew the value of the day's work. Too bad he's gone. Scrooge trudged home, climbed steps towards his bedroom, and huddled in a chair next to the fire to eat his evening thickets. Clank! What the hell? Scrooge sat still and listened. He didn't hear anything. I guess I'm dreaming. He settled back in his chair. Clank! Clank! Scrooge sat down straight. It wasn't a dream, he muttered. No, it wasn't a dream, Ebenezer. The voice echoed through Scrooge's bedroom. The man, pale and ghostly, slipped into the room. Scrooe was looking at him, Marley? Jacob Ma's Riley? But you're... You are... Dead. The ghost nodded. And paying for my sins. Sins? Scrooge frowned. But you were a good man, Jacob. Who loved it: Business? We loved the hotel. Business is useless. I've never learned the value of love and charity while I was alive. Now I roam the earth, unable to find peace. The same fate awaits you, Ebenezer, unless you change your path. Three spirits will be visited. The first one will arrive when the clock strikes one. The ghost bowed his hat and disappeared. The scrooge pulled over the blankets over his head. Bong! The clock hit one. Ebenezer? Ebenezer Scrooge? Scrooge peeked out from under his sheet. The woman, pale and glowing, stood beside his bed. In her hand she was holding a sprig holly. Who are you? whispered Scrooe. Scrooge crept out of his bed and followed the ghost. The room began to dissolve, and soon he looked at the window in another room, small and dark. This house, said Scrooge. Seems familiar. It's a house I just grew up in. Yes. The ghost nodded. And the boy? Is he familiar, too? Scrooge looked out the window. A little boy sat alone in the corner, reading a book. Scaoth's eyes widened. It's me as a child! But why am I... why did he ... sitting alone? Scrooge looked at the boy. It's Christmas Day, isn't it? The ghost nodded, then asked, And where are your parents? Scrooge frowned. Work, I think. They worked hard when I was young to give me what I needed. And they? asked the ghost. She pointed to the boy. Do they give you what you need? Scrooge studied the boy. He looked well fed and well dressed, but his eyes were sad and scared. He reminded Scrooge of caroler from the night before. Then he remembered how he had screamed and scared the boy. To continue reading the Christmas carol, see the next page. Bah humbug!
